

Altova's XMLSPY to be Included in Industry Recognized Borland Development Tools

SPECIAL EDITION OF ALTOVA XMLSPY AVAILABLE IN BORLAND® DELPHI™ STUDIO, BORLAND® C++ BUILDER,® AND BORLAND® C#BUILDER™ FOR THE MICROSOFT® .NET FRAMEWORK

BEVERLY, Mass., August, 28, 2003 - Altova Inc., (<http://www.altova.com>) producer of XMLSPY™ 5, a leading XML development environment with over one million registered users worldwide, today announced an agreement with Borland Software Corporation, to include a special edition of Altova XMLSPY 5 within future editions of Borland® Delphi™ Studio, Borland® C++ Builder,® and Borland® C#Builder™ for the Microsoft® .NET Framework integrated development environments (IDEs).

XML is widely used as a programming-language-neutral means for describing application data and business content. By combining a special version of the Altova XMLSPY 5 XML development environment with industry recognized Borland XML enabled software development environments, the Borland developer community is provided a tool to enable them to easily model, edit, test and debug the next-generation of XML-enabled enterprise applications.

"XML technologies have become an increasingly important aspect of enterprise software development projects," said Simon Thornhill, vice president and general manager of .NET solutions at Borland. "Our goal is to provide development teams with the tools they need to tackle their most challenging projects. By combining our XML enabled IDEs with Altova XMLSPY 5, we are helping to increase developer productivity, providing the tools needed to unite XML or Web Services projects in a common language, facilitating broader communication."
